This class will introduce students to global contemporary art practice using drawing as the conceptual starting point through which other media can be employed. Students will work to develop imaginative and thoughtful solutions to a series of open-ended, material- and concept-based problems tied to issues such as perspective, collaboration, site specificity, appropriation, reproduction, text and image, documentation, and performance. Students will develop a vocabulary of basic critical concepts and language through assigned readings and frequent group critiques and discussions. The class will include presentations by visiting artists, and other art professionals, and there will be one field trip. The course will culminate in an exhibition in the college galleries where students will be responsible for the organization and installation of artwork.
